

Game of Thrones

Written by: Andrew McLeod

Many things clue for this puzzle to be about chess:

- The title
- “Garry” (Kasparov)
- The flavor text lines reading “PGN”
- The numbering of the clues

We also notice that the grid is 8x8, the same size as a chessboard. Eventually, we discover that the clue answers should be written on the grid as the pieces move. The following rules apply:

- Non-jumping pieces (all those except knights) have the clue written starting at their current position and ending at their finishing position.
- Knights (since they can jump and therefore do not “touch” any of the squares along the way) have their answers written only on their starting and ending squares. This makes sense when we realize that all knight moves are answers of length 2.

This seems simple enough. However, we soon realize that many of the moves are incomplete. Through deductive reasoning, we can figure out all of the moves and fill in the grid while playing out the chess game. Important here is that each “?” replaces EXACTLY ONE CHARACTER in the move. In some cases, the lengths of the annotated moves are important for deciding the correct continuation. (Answers and moves are listed below).

We eventually reach a filled grid and a completed game of chess. Extracting letters from the completed grid in the order given by the numbers 1-9, results in...gibberish. However, we may notice that the numbers in the given grid correspond to the starting positions of each of the pieces that remain on the finished board. Using instead the letters from each piece’s FINAL position results in the solution: RARE METAL.
